are inclined to sak: is the Japanese Government in Korea a "feeding" government, that is to say, has Japan ever sincerely endeavored to develope Korea for the sake of Korea? No true friend or really patriotic subject of hers will answer in the fifth and the subject of hers will answer in the fifth and the subject of hers will answer in the nation. Ever since the Annexation not a day has passed in which the interests of the Koreans have not come to the foremost in the speculation of Japanese politics. The fair slogans of equal opportunity, freecompetition and the legitimate procedure of huying and selling, after all, can not closk the hideousness of a systematic elimination a subject people. No nation's economics but need some protective measures sometimes—far more so in our case.

They hold forth the enormous amount of money they have spent for Korea. The influx of Japanese capital into Korea since the Annexation down to the end of 1923 is put at ¥1,008,000,000 while the outflow of capital from Korea to Japan during the same period amounts to ¥265,000,000 the halance being ¥745,000,000. On the other hand, the trade balance between the two countries shows in favour of Japan the tremendous margin of many millions of yen more than the capital balance. Much probing is not needed to lay hare the alleged altruistic ends sought by Japan Can any one who has the slightest king-edge of the true situation deny that the bulk of the money has not been spent at all but invested either as fixed or circulating capital to keep up the dreadful economic machinery solely devoted to the Japanese interests to the havoc of the rightful, native sons? Moreover the trade balance means, for a large part, loss of wealth by the Koreans. This does not simply mean the privation of their pocket money, but their farming lands, their sole source of wealth. To accelerate this process of "changing hands", the tariff wall between Korea and Japan has been torn down. How can a nation that has recently enacted a luxury taxa reconcile itself to the r
